JACK BARRY OF MACKMEN IS 28 TODAY

John J. Barry is the way he signs his name to official documents, but everybody in our set calls him "Jack." The eminent shortstop of the Athletics, who has been called by some critics the greatest shortstop of the post-Wagnerian era, was born in Meriden, Conn., twenty-eight years ago today, April 28, 1872. Three years before the infant Barry made his mundane debut in Meriden, a young fellow who answered to the name of Cornelius McGillicuddy commenced his baseball career in the same city. Connie had gone away from the scene of his first triumph before Jack arrived, but the fact that Barry was a native of Meriden may have had some influence in inducing the wise old pilot of the Athletics to give Jack a try-out on his well-known baseball club.

Like so many others of the Mackian brigade, Barry is a college man. Although Connie himself didn't know what the inside of a college looked like when he was a lad, he has always had a fondness for the rah-rah lads. Many of the most celebrated Mackmen, past and present, have absorbed intellectual nutriment from the higher founts of learning. "Chief" Bender assimilated much knowledge and lore at Carleton and Dickinson Colleges, and Eddie Plank emitted the yell of Gettysburg College. Jack Combs was a Colby College man. Pitcher Wyckoff hails from Bucknell College, and Lloyd Davies, twirler for Amherst College. Eddie Collins was a Columbia University student when Mack grabbed him. Old Harry Davis was educated at Girard College, and Bill Kopf was a member of the Fordham College team when Mack slapped him. Murphy was a Villanova collegian when Connie put the Athletics band on him. Harry Krause, one-time Mackian southpaw, was a graduate of California College. Barry's alma mater was Holy Cross College, at Worcester, Mass., and there he played every infield position. He was only a fair-to-middling sort of player, and only the keen eye of Connie Mack could have detected the makings in him of a major league star. The old Eagle Eyes of Philadelphia saw the stuff in Barry, however, and in the Autumn of 1895 he filed away in his archives a contract bearing the signature of the college lad, Jack warned the bench most of the time the remainder of that season, but was given a try-out at second base. Connie quickly discovered that shortstop was Barry's natural job, and in that position he was one of the stars of the famous Athletic infield.

BASEBALL GOSSIP.

Outfielder Wilson Collins, once with the Braves, has been turned over to Newark by Jersey City.

"We're just starting the season," modestly remarks Manager Pat Moran of the Phillies. "I'm not going to make any predictions. Just watch us."

The Phillies continue to lead the National League. The Quakers have no regard for the Braves' feelings.

The Giants are leading the National League pennant race upside down. The Gotham players must feel out of place at the bottom of the heap.

Since joining the Pirates this spring, Johnston, the former Cleveland first baseman, has been playing a great game.

Those Phillies have reasons for being proud. Taking three straight games from the Champion Braves is enough to make any team stuck up.

Alexander, the Phillies' big pitcher, continued with his perfect record. All teams look alike to him, whether they are the champs or near champs.

RECORD FALL OF THERMOMETER IS REGISTERED HERE

Mercury Drops 20 Degrees in as Many Minutes on Hot April Afternoon.

One of the most remarkable changes in temperature ever recorded in this city or vicinity occurred yesterday when the thermometer which registered 93.5 degrees about 3:30 o'clock fell in less than 20 minutes to below 70 degrees. According to William Jennings of 615 Noble avenue, who for over 40 years has recorded every freak of the weather, it was the hottest April day by three degrees since 1875, when the first records of the changes in the weather here were begun.

The next hottest April day recorded in 40 years was in 1896 when the thermometer reached 89 degrees. From the middle of the forenoon yesterday the sun shone bright and warm and the temperature rose rapidly until it was as warm as a day in July or August. Women donned summer dresses and many men laid off their vests. The trolley lines were taxed to capacity with people who were out for a breath of fresh air and the parks were crowded. Suddenly at about 3:35 o'clock the sky became darkened and a hurricane of cold wind blew from the north, sending the mercury tumbling and sending chills down the backs of the thinly clad people who were out for the air.

When the force of the wind cloud was spent the wind shifted and a steady cool breeze blew from the northwest for the remainder of the evening. Such a sudden change in the weather has never been recorded here.
